BOOKS!

By the light of a silvery moon I lean out of the window to stare at the last great city on earth so I will never forget it.

How it looked: paper-blue squares, shadows. How it sounded: the silence of the grave. How it smelt: acid, water, smoke.

I try to drink everything in, remember every detail. Faded adverts on the top of apartment blocks, fire escapes hung with drying clothes, twinkling lights on skyscrapers in the distance.

I wonder what will go first. These things, us, or the city itself. All the places I've ever known. The glass towers, the deserted houses of the Culdee Sack, the stinking slums of Waste Town, maybe even the chimneys of Facto.

The Jabberwocky

'Twas brillig, and the slithy toves
Did gyre and gimble in the wabe;
All mimsy were the borogoves,
And the mome raths outgrabe.
